

In US, an Epidemic of Prescription Drug Abuse

AP

Dr. Jacob Khushigian with an overdose patient at a hospital emergency room in Visalia, California, in 2010. Also shown is a computer database that lets doctors know what drugs their patients already are taking.

This is the VOA Special English Health Report.

Officials in the United States say deadly abuse of painkillers and other prescription drugs has reached epidemic levels. More than thirty-six thousand people died from drug overdoses in two thousand eight, the latest year available. That was almost as many as from road crashes.

More than half of the overdoses involved drugs that need a doctor's approval. And three-fourths of those deaths involved what are called opioid pain relievers. These include drugs like methadone; morphine; hydrocodone, also known as Vicodin; and oxycodone, or OxyContin.

Death rates from prescription drugs were highest among people forty-five to fifty-four years old.

A recent government report said painkiller deaths more than tripled in the past decade. They now top the number of heroin and cocaine deaths combined. The Obama administration released a plan last year to try to deal with the problem.

Some abusers seek help at places like the Malibu Beach Recovery Center near Los Angeles. They learn yoga and other ways to deal with anxiety, stress and pain. Yoga teacher Shannon Scott herself formerly abused Vicodin and the anti-anxiety pill Xanax.

SHANNON SCOTT: "Vicodin was a stimulant for me. So I also used Vicodin as something to, you know, get my engine going and carry me through the day. And then my Xanax would, you know, balance me out and bring me down and relax me."

Joan Borsten heads the center. She says stopping is difficult because the drugs change the body's chemistry.

JOAN BORSTEN: "In the case of pain pills, the body has stopped producing its natural defenses to pain, and they just have to have more and more and more and more, and finally there's nothing else to take."

Around the country, special drug courts work with addicts to get them counseling and treatment. Mary Ann Gunn is a retired drug-court judge. She now appears on "Last Shot With Judge Gunn," a television program that shows the effect of drugs on users and their families.

MARY ANN GUNN: "For instance, in nineteen ninety-nine, the big problem was methamphetamine. And it was a cancer, if you will, throughout our country. And we have addressed that and are continuing to address it. And more and more over the years we began to see people being addicted to prescription drugs."

James Adams is a pharmacologist at the University of Southern California in Los Angeles. He says millions of people live with pain, much of it from arthritis caused by obesity and aging.

JAMES ADAMS: "And it's a real tough problem for a doctor because here you've got a patient with chronic pain, and these patients know exactly how to get what they want. And if that doctor doesn't give it to them, they just go to the next doctor."

He says many patients may be able to manage their pain if they lose weight and get exercise and physical therapy. Another solution: California and many other states have registries. These tell doctors and pharmacists what potentially dangerous drugs their patients are already taking.

Now do the worksheet ...

Level: beginner - intermediate

Time: 20 -30 minutes

This worksheet will help you learn new vocabulary about prescription drugs. You will answer questions about prescription drug abuse, and write a short paragraph about whether this is a problem in your country.

1. Write the word from the word box next to its definition below.

| | | | |
|--------------|---------------|-----------------|-----------------|
| abuse | addict | epidemic | overdose |
|--------------|---------------|-----------------|-----------------|

- a. a sudden quickly spreading occurrence of something harmful or unwanted _____
- b. a person who is not able to stop taking drugs _____
- c. the act of using too much of a drug, alcohol, etc. _____
- d. an amount of a drug that is too much and usually dangerous _____

2. What is a prescription drug?

- a drug that you buy on the street
- a drug that a doctor gives you
- a drug that is very dangerous

3. What is chronic pain?

- a sudden, sharp pain
- pain that continues for a long time

4. Look at the title of the article: In US, an Epidemic of Prescription Drug Abuse. What is the article about?

- people are buying too many dangerous drugs on the street
- people are using too many prescription drugs
- people are selling too many drugs

5. How many people died from drug overdoses in 2008? _____

How many of these deaths were because of prescription drugs? _____

6. What age were most people who died from an overdose of prescription drugs?

7. Why do some abusers learn yoga?

so they can better feel the drug's effects

to deal with anxiety, stress, and pain

to get more prescription drugs

8. Where does Joan Borsten work?

9. Why does Joan Borsten say that it is difficult to stop taking drugs?

10. What advice does James Adams give to patients who want to manage their pain?

OVER TO YOU

Is prescription drug abuse a problem in your country? How do you think the problem could be helped?

Write 5-8 sentences explaining your answer.

ANSWER KEY

- 1. epidemic, addict, abuse, overdose
- 2. a drug that a doctor gives you
- 3. pain that continues for a long time
- 4. people are using too many prescription drugs
- 5. more than 36,000; more than half
- 6. 45-54
- 7. to deal with anxiety, stress, and pain
- 8. the Malibu Beach Recovery Center
- 9. She says stopping is difficult because the drugs change the body's chemistry.
- 10. He says many patients may be able to manage their pain if they lose weight and get exercise and physical therapy.